Hilary Page brings a diverse legal background to her employment law practice. She has experience with a wide variety of workplace issues including wrongful dismissal, constructive dismissal, human rights matters and workplace compliance issues.

She started her career summering with a litigation boutique in downtown Toronto and then articulated in-house at a municipality, where she developed an interest in workplace and human rights law. After articling Hilary worked in Kingston, Ontario as a criminal defence and prison lawyer before joining a mid-sized regional firm as an associate in the Labour and Employment group.

Hilary was called to the Ontario bar in 2013. She has a law degree from Queen's University and an honours Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Toronto, where she majored in English Literature and minored in French and Women and Gender Studies. Hilary also spent a year at McGill University and has a certificate in professional Chef Training from George Brown College in Toronto.

Originally from Scarborough, Hilary splits her time between Toronto and Ottawa. She is a passionate outdoors lover, foodie, and yogi. Hilary enjoys hikes with her dog Jack, farmers' markets, pizza and travel to warm places. Be sure to ask her about that time a bear chased her off her campsite in the Algonquin interior. She's tough.
